Annexure B: Guide to Drafting and Submitting Resolutions to UN Councils at Kovsies Model United Nations

Introduction:

Drafting and submitting resolutions is a crucial aspect of participating in Model United Nations (MUN) conferences. Resolutions serve as the primary means for proposing solutions to global issues and influencing the decision-making process. This guide provides a step-by-step approach to help delegates draft and submit resolutions effectively during the Kovsies Model United Nations.

Understand the Topic and Committee:

Familiarize yourself with the committee's mandate and the specific topic of discussion. Conduct thorough research to gather relevant information, including historical context, existing international agreements, and potential solutions. Understanding the nuances of the topic will enable you to create a well-informed and persuasive resolution.

Structure of a Resolution:

Resolutions generally follow a standardized structure. Include the following sections:

- a) Preamble: Provides an overview of the issue, historical background, and references to relevant international documents.
- b) Operative Clauses: Propose specific actions, policies, or solutions to address the issue.
- c) Signatories: List the countries or delegates supporting the resolution.

Collaborate and Build Consensus:

Collaboration is key to developing strong resolutions. Engage in informal negotiations, build alliances with like-minded delegates, and seek common ground. This process helps to shape the language and content of the resolution while promoting consensus among delegates.

Preamble:

- a) Begin with preambulatory clauses that acknowledge the significance of the issue and establish its context.
- b) Refer to relevant international agreements, conventions, and resolutions to reinforce the legitimacy and importance of your proposed solutions.

c) State any previous actions or initiatives taken by the international community or the UN on the issue.

Operative Clauses:

- a) Craft clear, concise, and actionable clauses that address the issue.
- b) Each operative clause should propose a specific action or policy that contributes to a comprehensive solution.
- c) Use action verbs to denote the actions to be taken by relevant stakeholders, such as "calls for," "urges," "recommends," or "requests."
- d) Ensure that clauses are logically organized and flow smoothly, building on one another to form a coherent plan of action.

Signatories:

- a) Before submitting the resolution, seek support from other delegates and countries who align with your proposed solutions.
- b) Add the names of countries or delegates supporting the resolution as signatories.
- c) Aim to obtain a broad and diverse range of signatories to strengthen the legitimacy and support for your resolution.

Formatting and Citation:

- a) Follow the designated formatting guidelines provided by Kovsies Model United Nations.
- b) Use proper citation style (e.g., APA or MLA) when referencing sources in your resolution or including a bibliography.
- c) Ensure accurate and consistent referencing to demonstrate the credibility of your research.

Proofreading and Finalizing:

- a) Carefully review your resolution for grammatical errors, clarity, and coherence.
- b) Check for consistency in terminology and formatting throughout the document.
- c) Seek feedback from peers or faculty advisors to improve the resolution's quality and effectiveness.

Submission:

- a) Follow the specified instructions for submitting resolutions at Kovsies Model United Nations.
- b) Be aware of the submission deadline and ensure that your resolution is submitted on time.
- c) Keep a copy of the resolution for reference during the conference and for potential amendments or discussions.

Conclusion:

Drafting and submitting resolutions is a vital skill for MUN delegates. By following this guide, you can develop well-structured, persuasive resolutions that address the committee's topic effectively.
